Mystery Deepens After US Confirms 16 Diplomats Suffered "Traumatic Brain Injury" In Cuban 'Sonic Attack'

by Tyler Durden

One of the most bizarre stories this week took a more sinister turn yesterday as the US State Department officially confirmed 16 US Government employees were affected by health attacks in Cuba.

State Department spokesperson Heather Nuarte calmly explained the details, which are quite frankly stunning...

.@statedeptspox: We can now confirm that at least 16 USG employees were affected by attacks in #Cuba pic.twitter.com/UEy1PJ7bXt

— Department of State (@StateDept) August 24, 2017

And yet most of the mainstream media seems loathed to cover this!? Happy to focus on nazis?

CBS News, however, did some digging, discovering from a review of medical records that the American and Canadian diplomats in Cuba have been diagnosed with mild traumatic brain injury - and central nervous damage - after an apparent attack with a sonic weapon targeted their homes.

The diplomats complained about symptoms ranging from hearing loss and nausea to headaches and balance disorders after the State Department said "incidents" began affecting them beginning in late 2016.

A number of diplomats have cut short their assignments in Cuba because of the attacks.

The source says American diplomats have also been subjected other types of harassment including vehicle vandalism, constant surveillance, and home break-ins.

As Axios reports, The State Department hasn't explicitly identified the source of the attack or what person or entity might have carried it out.

"We hold the Cuban authorities responsible for finding out who is carrying out these health attacks on not just our diplomats but, as you've seen now, there are other cases with other diplomats involved," Secretary of State Rex Tillerson told reporters earlier this month.

The Cuban government has denied any involvement with the incident.

Of course, while we wish these diplomats well (if recovery is possible), the big question is - what will the repercussions be for US-Cuba relations and what response will the Trump administration unleash? As Axios notes, the severity of the apparent injuries goes far beyond what was originally reported, so it stands to reason that President Trump's administration might choose to respond strongly given his prior rhetoric on Cuba, especially given that the report notes that the attacks on Americans are continuing.

Sonic attack is disinfo and code word for microwave attack.

Microwaves penetrate walls easily and sound does not, and could only be used effectively out in the open.

All the big powers have these weapons, and for the big user of microwave directed energy weapons (USA), to cry abuse (as they abuse the rest of the world) as well as U.S. citizens by DHS/Stasi, is beyond ridiculous.

Yanqui (zio-masons) go home and leave Latin America in peace.

I do have experience with .gov employees and their abuse of "situations" to become "disabled" or FMLA or etc... Where, one person suffers in 'incident' and 15 others come forward and copycat the symptoms.

Now...I have no reason to believe that's the case with these cuban diplo's....but I KNOW it is the case with thousands of domestic .gov employess.

Who's to say it's the Cubans?

After all, our Langley psychopaths are capable of far worse than that.

Communist Cuba was planned by the Deep State while Batista was still in power, it's just that their cutout Castro slipped the leash and went rogue.

This issue has all the earmarks of a false flag.

Plus the CIA gets to test out new toys and blame it on someone else, as usual.

It is unlikely that the Cubans would have something so advanced without the knowledge of the Swampites.

Maybe the Deep State screwballs are using a different form of HAARP technology.

Who's to say they wouldn't test it out on their own kind.

By the way, did they ever figure out how that Malaysian plane disappeared into thin air while it was in the vicinity of Diego Garcia?

If they can make a plane vanish off the radar without a trace and make the story go away, they can make anyone sick with no effort at all.

And, Cuba being a "rogue nation", is forced to business with other rogue nations...such as the DPRK, Venezuela, Russia, et cetera...

I have been to Cuba a number of times, it's hard to get on a tour bus without noticing that the bus is made in the DPRK. (or that the tour guides name is Vladimir Sanchez, names influenced from the old USSR involvement there).

I'm sure DPRK "diplomats" have fairly unfettered access to Cuban soil.

electromagnetic waves would have totally different effects, especially microwaves. if you were correct, these guys would have skin burns, not hearing loss and balance problems (inner ear). this is most likely an effect of high amplitude infrasonic waves.

peddling-fiction yrat Aug 25, 2017 1:46 PM

No sir. I myself am a microwaved, targeted individual by deep state and have measured the microwaves myself. They can burn if the power is high, but when low they can affect you biologically and neurologically, or simply torment you. WIFI uses the 2.4 Ghz microwave frequency, just like the microwave oven does, and the only difference is power. One burns, and the other communicates (and also causes electrosensitivity to some). Less than one watt (Wifi) versus say 2000 watts (oven). More info on this nasty rabbit hole: <https://www.facebook.com/tishielding/>

RumpleShitzkin peddling-fiction Aug 25, 2017 2:31 PM

Yrats comment deserves some thought.

Vent fans, elevator lift motors, hvac...a whole slew of gear can give of Infrasound. I spoke with a maintenance guy at a building I had to work in as a contractor. The whole fucking office had one of the worst vibes to it I'd ever felt. I only kept my equipment and the machines I had to deploy there and spent as little time as possible there. Most people I was friends with there complained of migraines. Generally speaking, just a real high level of hostility and agitation permeated the place. Everyone noticed it.

Long story short, a belt blew out on a large exhaust fan on the top floor.

When it was worked on and changed...wha lah...no more.

Maintenance guy swore something about the fan setup had never been assembled properly and that the motor/fan was kicking out some sort of infrasonic garbage.

Anecdotal, I know, but I'm convinced having been there that he may have been on to something.

peddling-fiction Rumpleshitzkin Aug 25, 2017 3:08 PM

Nobody is asserting that infrasound can't hurt you, or ultrasound for that matter.

It just is not that useful for attacking agents or diplomats, nor NWO dissidents, like me.

Microwaves are very useful and range from bothersome to lethal in an instant.

Macavity peddling-fiction Aug 25, 2017 2:39 PM

Try magnetic induction. It's about field strength but more importantly high frequency. Think an induction hob being weaponised.

peddling-fiction Macavity Aug 25, 2017 3:10 PM

Microwaves also emanate a magnetic field, that can be used to hurt you as well.

Implied Violins peddling-fiction Aug 25, 2017 4:12 PM

I found something that actually helps against that stuff, and it's orgone energy pucks (a la Wilhelm Reich). PG&E installed smart meters next to my bedroom wall, and I had trouble sleeping afterward. So I ordered a few of them and I've slept well ever since. You can get them from several different places; just DuckDuckGo it.

peddling-fiction Implied Violins Aug 25, 2017 4:23 PM

Use barriers of water. H₂O blocks microwaves. It attenuates them (lowers their power) very effectively.

Plus they do not reflect microwaves like metallic surfaces will.

Think ice beverage coolers full of water, aquariums, water beds, water bottles in a suitcase etc.

Water works and is readily available and cheap.

peddling-fiction Lumberjack Aug 25, 2017 3:20 PM

You would be right about wind turbines generating dangerous infrasound to humans close by.

But if that were the case, then not only a handful of diplomats would have been affected.

Microwaves are the preferred directed energy weapon. Saying it is not so, starts to sound like the "company" defending itself with disinfo.

Lumberjack peddling-fiction Aug 25, 2017 4:04 PM

But they claim the embassy was blasted with infrasound and the symptomology is exactly the same. I've worked on low and high power microwave and the biggest gave me a headache especially working on the towers the dishes (antennas) were on. I immediately stopped working on the very high power shit after that.

The infrasound issue is a long term exposure thing, weeks to months and is real. I at first scoffed at the claims being made however, It proved out that I that I was quite wrong.

There are no wind turbines by the embassy, the concept still would apply if their claims are true. The wind turbine infrasound can travel up to 3-5 km.

"What goes round comes round"...

Lumberjack Lumberjack Aug 25, 2017 4:11 PM

Police started using an infrasound generating siren in these parts two years ago. You could feel it in nearby vehicles and in houses. They stopped using it suddenly without explanation. It was very annoying and I can only imagine what the officers went through running it.

Mysterious sonic weapons reportedly caused brain injuries in US diplomats in Cuba — here's what we know

- Mysterious "sonic weapons" have been blamed for symptoms affecting American and Canadian diplomats in Cuba.
- Victims reported hearing loss, mild traumatic brain injury, nervous system damage, and balance issues.
- Sound-based weapons exist, but experts aren't sure whether any were actually used in this case.

More than 10 US diplomats and their family members in Cuba have experienced strange symptoms including hearing loss, mild traumatic brain injury, and central nervous system damage after being exposed to some kind of mysterious sonic weapon, according to a review of medical records by CBS News.

The Associated Press reported: "After months of investigation, U.S. officials concluded that the diplomats had been exposed to an advanced device that operated outside the range of audible sound and had been deployed either inside or outside their residences. It was not immediately clear if the device was a weapon used in a deliberate attack, or had some other purpose."

But a number of experts aren't sure whether such a device exists.

"There isn't an acoustic phenomenon in the world that would cause those type of symptoms," Seth Horowitz, a neuroscientist and author of the book "The Universal Sense: How Hearing Shapes the Mind," told Business Insider via email.

Horowitz explained that no known inaudible — and seemingly undetectable — device could have the properties attributed to these strange sonic weapons.

Would someone target diplomats with mysterious devices?

Starting in late 2016, a number of diplomats and their family members sought medical attention for mysterious nausea, hearing problems, and balance issues. At least five Canadians have experienced similar symptoms, according to CNN.

The attacks — if that's what they were — appear to have stopped. But it remains unknown what sort of device could have caused these medical issues and who was behind these attacks.

Thomson Reuters

Diplomats have experienced other forms of harassment, like break-ins and surveillance, since the US formally restored diplomatic relations with Cuba in 2015. But a physical attack is unprecedented, and many experts say Cuba has no interest in damaging relations with the US. Some experts have said that the fact Canadians experienced similar symptoms make the possibility of an intentional "attack" even less likely, since Cuba and Canada have a strong relationship.

Because of these factors, experts wonder whether the symptoms could be the result of a third party (potentially from another government) trying to sabotage US-Cuban relations. Others have mused that this could be some sort of eavesdropping device gone haywire.

It "sounds like a science experiment," James Carson, former head of the US Interests Section in Havana, told The New York Times.

For the most part, it seems victims didn't hear anything, which implies the device operates outside the audible range of sound. But CNN's report said two officials also described "a deafeningly loud sound similar to the buzzing created by insects or metal scraping across a floor," though no one knew where that sound came from.

Toby Heys, the leader of Manchester Metropolitan University's Future Technology research center told New Scientist that it's possible for something emitting infrasound — vibrations at a frequency below what humans can hear — to cause hearing loss. But Heys said that would require large subwoofers, making covert deployment unlikely.

Ultrasound devices, which operate above the range of human hearing, exist and could damage the ears, Heys said. But these would need to be directly targeted into the ear.

"Overall, I would be pretty circumspect about the claims to be honest — it is all very Philip K. Dick territory," Heys said. "That said, we are living in a fairly surreal world right now."

Horowitz said via email that without more evidence of these weapons, this incident should be considered a non-story, and that other possible explanations for these medical problems should be considered.

Sonic weapons have been used to repel Somali pirates. AP

The use of sonic weaponry

Sonic weapons do exist, but for the most part they are "highly visible and easy to avoid," according to Horowitz.

Such weapons include long range acoustic devices, or LRADs, which emit a shrill, loud, disabling sound that can damage the hearing of people more than 900 feet away. These devices have been used by US troops in Iraq, for crowd control in New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina, and by cruise ships to repel Somali pirates. Similar "sound cannons" were also used by police against protestors at the G-20 meetings in Pittsburgh in 2009.

But those devices are large and emit obvious sounds. A mystery machine that emits harmful, silent waves defies any immediate explanation.

Business Insider has reached out to other experts on non-lethal weaponry and will update this post if a plausible explanation emerges.
